Excerpt: . . . enterprises, it is that the ten-cent store idea must be applied to the building industry. This is set down in the Seattle daily press. The home-building problem of the country must be approached from a new angle. The central idea must be to build well, yet inexpensively, so that the opportunity of home ownership may be widened and extended to persons to whom, heretofore, it has been closed. The problem can be solved by private interests. If they devote their time and bend their energies to the situation they will meet the same success that was theirs in the automobile and in the piano industries. The paramount idea in all these industries is to increase sales. The task is accomplished by two means: (1) Decreasing the cost of manufacturing without seriously diminishing quality, and (2) devising ways and means whereby purchasers may easily pay...
