At the conclusion of this memorable debate, which took place on June 24th, 1850, Sir Robert Peel Bart. (17881850), in a brief speech of singular eloquence and wisdom, expressed his reluctant dissent from the motion, and uttered his final caution against perverting diplomacy, the great engine used by civilized society for the purpose of maintaining peace, into a cause of hostility and war. Needless to say, the Opposition had no intention whatever of blaming the Government for undertaking the protection of the Jews. There was only a difference of attitude, not one of principle, between the Palmerston Government and the Opposition. The Opposition became alarmed about the dangerous consequences which they thought likely to result from certain steps taken by the Government; the Government, on the other hand, had to consider carefully every new scheme of protection for the Jews, particularly after the conflict with Greece in the Don Pacifico case. Reviewing the whole period and all the petitions, projects and experiments in connection with the colonization of Palestine by Jews, we see that Great Britains protection was considered a conditio sine qua non for their success--at least as far as English Jews were interested in the movement. It is the same idea which modern Zionism expressed half a century later in the Basle Programme (1897) by demanding the consent of the Powers in the form of a legal guarantee or public recognition. The formula was different; but the fundamental idea is...
