Excerpt from The Substance of a Discourse, Delivered at the Universalist Meeting-House in Charestown, Mass: April 13, 1815, Being the Day of General Thanksgiving for the Return of Peace; To Which Is Added, an Address to the Singing Society and Choir We have a part in the interests and happiness of others. Hence, their sorrows or their joys become proportionably our own. Influenced by this principle, so favourable to human welfare, we have sighed with the prisoner, borne to far distant climes; we have deplored the wounded and dying brave, who have nobly barred their bosoms to the sword, thirsting for blood. We have mourned with their anxious, dejected relatives. We have participated the distresses of our country, struggling in the martial conflict, opposed to potent and numerous hosts. Such were our exercises and our sensations, till the sound of Peace roused, cheered and invigorated us. As the weary traveller, on All panting, famishing with that the sight of the cooling stream; were we rat the highly interesting intelligence which has recently blessed our land. Every heart beat with new joy. Every face wore smiles of congratulation. We then experienced, and it cannot be so soon forgotten, that as cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country. It will be a natural and proper use of these words, and a reasonable exercise upon the present occasion, to illustrate the principles and circumstances, which render the late news from a far country emphatically good news.
