The results of the decomposition are very complicated, but the products obtained by this method of oxidizing oleic acid present considerable interest, since they contain, according to Redtenbacher, all the terms of the homologous series of the volatile acids (C H.04) from the acetic to the capric acid inclusive, these acids being found in the distillate; whilst according to Laurent (Ann. de Chitnie, II. lxvi. 154), four fixed acids are left in the retort, and these form contiguous terms of a group of homologous dibasic acids of the formula 2 HO, (C.H,) 06. The quantity of the volatile acids is greater when the nitric acid used is very concentrated; if it be more dilute, that of the fixed acids is increased. The fixed acids which remain in the retort, are the following: --Suberic acid 3 HO, C16H12O₅ Pimelic acid 2 HO, CuH10O₆ Adipic acid 2 HO, Ci2H8 06 Lipic acid 3 HO, C10H6 06? It is interesting to remark that another acid of this group--viz., the sebacic acid (2 HO, CH₃gOg) is a characteristic product of the distillation of oleic acid; and succinic acid (2 HO, C8H4O₂), which is one of the most frequent products of the action of nitric acid upon the series of acids (CBH 04) is the next term below the lipic acid. Some of the acids of this series will now be described. (c) Dibasic Acids of the Oxalic...
