Reviews

It is a of the best book. Indeed, it really is play, nevertheless an amazing and interesting literature. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

In the combined processes of manufacturing and carbureting blue water gas according to present practice, few experiments have been made on the equilibria of the constituents to find out the effect of varying pressure, temperature and concentration conditions. In the technical literature of gas manufacture, one rarely finds a reference to the relationship which may exist between the spheres of reaction in the process. The natural conclusion has been that the water gas and oil gas reactions are separate and influence each other but little. It is proposed to consider some of the factors in which the H_2 , CO , CO_2 and H_2O of the blue water gas may affect the proportions of CH_4 , C_2H_6 , H_2 , etc., resulting from the cracking of the gas oil which is added. Likewise the influence of the gases coming from the oil on the percentage composition of the final gas mixture will be considered. When the blue water gas or oil gas are manufactured in separate operations, hydrogen is the only gas which is found in the free state, in any quantity. But if the two gases, separately made, should be brought together at high temperature in a container such as a gas plant superheater, would there not be new equilibria to be satisfied? For example, might not the CO and H_2 of one become in equilibrium conditions tend to establish themselves...
